

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has stopped the interrupting telephone calls for telemarketers during family supper, homework time, reading time and has greatly increased "our" time. The only phone calls we receive involve us personally not selling us something. It amazes me how you can possibly think of coming up with a more relaxed law and bring our home life back to the state of receiving numerous unwanted phone calls, interrupting quality family time.
